> THE REFORM BILL, The Speciator thus gives the spirit of the oneuing debate on the second reading of the Reform Bill. The debate of Thursday night, the first on the second rending of the reform Bill was at least animated. The large rolls of petitions in favour of the Bill which delayed the debate, appeared to produce tonic effect on the lender of the Lower House, and Mr. Gladstone's speach was ardent if not very convincing. He insisted on the Tory Government. plaiges not only to grant Reform, but to reduce the tranchise, which no one disputed. He attacked with rehemence the article in the Quarter y Review which assigns so distatorial an influence to Ha Bright, the Government's "invaticule ally." denouncing its statement as groundless, which no one doubted -except perhaps Lord Oranherne, who, at Mr. Gladetone's pointed ailusions these errors. " like the father that begot them. -gross as a mountain, open, pulpable," three back his head, and gasod as stendily at the seiling of the House as Sam Weller himelf when who might certainly have been described in similar language. Finally, Mr. Gladstons pinegyrised the progress of divilization truly enough but vory irrelevantly, and the working class quite as justly and quite as, irrelevantly, associed Mr. Lowe once again - with prefatory terms of compliment that evidently came from a deaply gratiful heart-and ended his eloquent speech hy saying that if gentlemau's description of the artian clear was true it was quite anough not only t destroy the Bill, but " to desirny also the hopes.

nicture, which my right honourable friend with his matchless pen strove to draw, is a trul Earl Grosvernor aspecch in automort of his amendment was amighle, wise so far as it quite diseagaged him from the Lowe anti-artizan prejudices, hut pale and very fceble, and it was not till Lord Stanley rose that the reasonable objections felt.on no party grounds by sincere Reformers,-amongst whom we unheritatingly rankon Lord Stanley,-to the Government measure found any adequate expression. Lord Stanley produced a profound effect by the lucidity and force with which he exposed he folly as well as the necessary blindness of a piecement reform of the representation. He point nd out that the motive of the refusal to produce the Distribution of Seats Bill until after the second reading might be construed very unpleasantly for Government.-namely, as reserving a means t rewarding and numering members for small boroughs within the diefranchisable limits, scoots ing to their vote, though he himself disclaimed the imputation. He kept fast hold of the real sim of the Bill, wis., a redistribution of power among different dections of the people, and asked how it was nozaible to approve a plan far any great building, if the architect submitted only his design for one or two rooms, and asked you to trust his skilland thate for the rest. He even denied the constitutional right of Parliam at thus to slur over its responsible legislative duties, and urged on the Ministers to mature their whole plan. - Franchist, redistribution of seats, rectification of borough boundaries -- and call a very early meeting of Parlimment for next session to consider it as a country as well as the House. MISCALLANBOUS. The following items of miscellaneous inwiigence are the most prominent amongs those which the papers contain. Dates from Jamaion are to the 25th March.
